The IRS states it is the donor's responsibility to assess the value of the donation and does not require additional assessment for donations that fall beneath the IRS specified $500 (See below). Each item donated in good used condition or better may still be worth a substantial donation value, and we recommend utilizing an authorized itemized donation valuing tool like those found from TurboTax, H&R Block and similar to establish their fair market value. For additional guidelines for charitable deductions and taxation please contact the IRS or a certified tax professional.

From IRS Publication 561:

Deduction over $500 for certain clothing or household items. You must include with your return a qualified appraisal prepared by a qualified appraiser of any single item of clothing or any household item that is not in good used condition or better, and for which you deduct more than $500. Attach the appraisal and Form 8283, Section B, Noncash Charitable Contributions, to your return.
